AN IMPRESSIVE OPENING.

About 9:30 o'clock this morning several hundred young men filed into the center door of St. Patrick's Church and a few moments later gun. This service formed the opening of the convention of the Catholic Young Men's National Union that is now being held in this city. For some time before the commencement of the service the main body of the church was well filled, but the seats on either

The sermon to the union was preached by Rt. Rev. J. J. Keane, D.D., rector of the Catholic University. It was a broad and earnest appeal to the young men and eloquent as shop Keane's sermons always are. He began by giving a hearty welcome to the union in the name of the cardinal, of the clergy of the diocese and of the parish, and in the name of all the parishes and all the people of the cap-ital city. He complimented the young men because they were members of a union that ad nothing to regret and to be ashamed of and that began the deliberations of its con-vention by such a solemn religious ceremony. "There are many organizations," said the bishop, "that would be afraid to ask the blessing of God on the business they transact in their conventions. Happy are you, thrice happy that you begin your deliberations by asking the blessing and the assistance of your Heavenly Father in the good work you have to do." He referred to the various objects of the union, mental and moral advancement and the mutual assistance in bettering the common condition of all, as objects worthy of hristian young men and each and all of them pleasing in the sight of the Lord. He said that the formation of the National Union of all the local societies was an effort to prevent them from becoming narrow and merely local, local in aim and sympathy, but that instead they should be broad and catholic. The spirit of the country and of the church is universality with unity. The church itself is catholic and universal and all tendencies toward congreganalism should be repressed and conquered. He congratulated the young men on being the precursors of so good a work that is spreading through the land its noble influences every day
